CITATION AND CROSS-CITATION POLICY

Purpose of the Policy

The Nova Ekonomija Proceedings is dedicated to publishing works in the field of innovative economics, with a significant portion of the content originating from scientific research presented at our conference. It is natural for papers to build upon one another and for authors to cite relevant sources from previous issues of the Proceedings or other related publications, including the Economics Innovative and Economics Research Journal.

Principles of Citation

Citations must be thematically justified and based on the scholarly relevance of the source. Authors have complete freedom in selecting sources and are not required to cite works from the Proceedings or related publications, except when such citations are scientifically and methodologically necessary. Authors are encouraged to include a variety of sources, including both domestic and international works from relevant scientific journals and conference proceedings.

Cross-Citation Policy

Citing works from related publications, such as the Economics Innovative and Economics Research Journal, is permitted and welcome when there is a genuine connection in topics, methodology, or research findings. The Proceedings does not apply any formal or informal pressure on authors to include citations from specific sources for the purpose of increasing citation counts. The editorial team and reviewers ensure that all citations in submitted papers are substantively justified and comply with ethical standards (COPE).

Ethical Compliance

This policy is aligned with the guidelines of the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) and with the standards of transparent publishing required by international bibliographic databases, including Scopus.

Transparency

The citation and cross-citation policy is publicly available on the Proceedings website and is applied consistently to all papers and authors.
